Noun: The process of growing plants in sand, gravel, or liquid (or other mediums), with added nutrients but without soil. Hydro is Latin for water and Ponos means works or labor. Water works! The main principles of hydroponics are increased oxygen to the root zone and liquid feed delivered directly to roots. These factors result in increased growth rates and increased yields when compared to tradition soil gardens where much lower oxygen and often nutrient levels are present.

Hydroponic gardening is better than soil gardening for several reasons. More plants can generally be grown in the same amount of space when compared to traditional soil gardens. Roots are delivered nutrients instead of having to stretch out in search of them. Also, hydroponic gardens can be stacked to further increase space efficiency. The main benefit to hydroponic gardening is much higher oxygen levels in the root zone when compared to a soil garden. This increased oxygen means increased nutrient up-take and much higher rates of growth. It is also much easier to control the nutrient levels in hydroponic gardens compared to soil gardens.

Eco-Friendly is similar to transforming "Trash to Treasure". By recycling something old, broken or discarded, an item that is no longer useful for its original purpose, we are helping our environment by heaping less clutter in our landfills. There are many ways to do this. You use an item originally intended for one purpose and modify it for use in an entirely different way. For example,

- Fixing old suitcases with pillows into pet beds for cats and dogs.
- Cutting old door frames and creating unique headboards for beds.
- Turning old, windowed doors into picture frames for wall decorations.
- Using an old pair of crutches and creating a 3-tiered shelf for displaying books, etc.
- Cutting old plastic soda bottles into spinners or whirl-a-gigs for lawn decoration.
- Turning old tires into decorative planters to be used in landscaping.

The possibilities are endless; these are but a few examples. Be creative, use your skills and imagination and build something functionally useful from old, discarded items. Be a part of the solution, not a part of the problem...

We will be awarding a special "BE-KIND-TO-OUR-WORLD" Eco-Friendly award.
